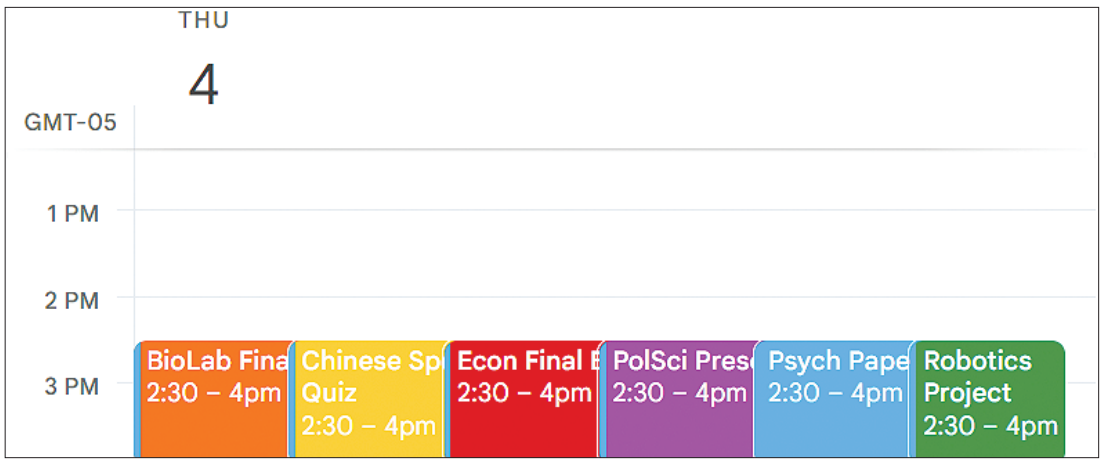
Registrar To Ensure All Your Finals On Same Day, At Same Time



Students taking the joint math and philosophy exams will be expected to produce an ironclad logical proof for the meaning of life.

As the final weeks of the semester approach, numerous U-M students have reported that all of their final exams are slated to take place on the exact same day and hour.

"We pride ourselves on our in-house, state-of-the-art algorithm that ensures every student's final exams fall at the exact same time on the exact same day," said a representative from the Office of the Registrar. "Double points if we can schedule the coinciding exams in buildings as far away from each other on campus as possible."

"Well, I think I can probably finish my econ exam and psych project simultaneously, as long as I don't double-check any of my answers or citations," explained LSA junior Steven Curtis. "Not sure how I'm gonna be able to complete my Chinese speaking quiz in the middle of those two, but I guess this is the only possible way that the schedule worked out."

Engineering senior Reginald Wires said he was "surprised" to see his capstone design presentation, German fairy tales final, and interpretive dance session all scheduled at the same time. "I'm confident they can all be combined into one project. I'll just do an interpretive dance of Hansel and Gretel inventing a climate-controlled snake examination enclosure for the Detroit Zoo."

At press time, the Registrar's Office was exploring ways to ensure that students could register for classes only after all their required ones had been filled.

Hegseth Insists Order For "Double Shot" Was In Reference To Drink

Hegseth did court-martial an officer who ordered a strike on a vessel that turned out to be carrying his favorite brand of rum.

In response to accusations of war crimes for his involvement in U.S. Navy strikes on Venezuelan boats, Secretary of War Pete Hegseth has insisted that his order for a "double shot" was referring to a glass of whiskey, not firing a second missile at survivors of the unprovoked attack.

"The left calling my actions 'illegal' and 'in violation of the Geneva Convention' is absurd," said Hegseth in a press release. "God forbid a guy sips on a tall glass of fine Scotch at work while he fires upon unarmed foreign nationals with absolutely no proof they've done anything illegal."

Despite his claim that he was only referring to a beverage, Hegseth made it clear that he does not believe there is any legal issue with the US military's strikes on vessels off the coast of Venezuela. "We will continue to target any and all boats carrying illegal and highly dangerous drugs like fentanyl, cocaine, and fish. Except, of course, those transporting Donald Trump Jr's personal cocaine supply."

"The marxist media is once again telling lies to ruin the reputation of a good man," said White House press secretary Karoline Leavitt. "Everyone knows that Pete would never hurt a fly or wait until he leaves work to start drinking hard liquor."

At press time, Hegseth changed his mind, saying, "Actually, better make it a triple. Oh, and murder some more people too."

Sherrone Moore Claims Only 12 Million More Dollars Needed For Underwood To Get Good

The athletics department was also soliciting donations to hire someone to teach the defensive line how to tackle.

After Bryce Underwood experienced what some pundits have called an "underwhelming" first season with the Michigan Wolverines, head coach Sherrone Moore revealed that he has a plan to fix the problems in the off season, as long as someone could pay Underwood another $12 million.

"Yep, I think about 12 million more dollars will fix it," said Moore in a press conference. "With those 12 million dollars, Bryce can really dedicate himself to the team instead of all this degree stuff he's having to jump through right now."

Moore continued by saying, "Even a small donation of a million dollars could help us teach him not to throw into triple coverage and how to safely slide so he doesn't get pummeled by the defense during every run play."

"We might even be able to splurge and get a Ross student to give him lessons in color to ensure he throws the ball to the team wearing the correct jersey," said an anonymous financial advisor in the athletics department. "We could even invest it in some ball-handling lessons for our receivers or better training so we're not using our 'how-do-we-have-this-many' string running backs. It'll be the gift that keeps on giving!"

At press time, the athletics department was reportedly setting up a GoFundMe to raise money to move Semaj Morgan as far away from the field as possible.

Senior PolSci Major Must Have Missed Class About Pedophile Conspiracy

The U of M Political Science Department has recently announced Ghislaine Maxwell will be a guest speaker at the 2026 Political Science Commencement Ceremony.

In recent weeks, reports indicate that many U-M political science students have begun reaching out to their academic councilors to inquire whether they "had somehow missed the class that explained the giant pedophile conspiracy part of government."

"I mean, clearly child molesters with infinite coverup money are an indispensable part of our government's day-to-day operations, but I've never once encountered this idea in any of my lectures," claimed LSA senior Claire Morell, a political science major. "I have to assume that I somehow completely missed the class that would've explained such a central feature of our nation."

According to senior political science major Laney Clark, the lack of such a class has led to "concerns" over the viability of a degree in political science. "I can't believe that I've wasted all this time learning about election statistics and 19th-century economic theories when learning to commit monstrous sexual crimes would've been far more useful for my career," said Clark.

"I'm shocked that it wasn't listed as a major requirement, considering the number of alleged statutory rapists in federal government offices," explained POLSCI major Brandon Sheffa. "So far, I've had classes in a few different subfields like 'political theory,' 'comparative politics,' and 'American government,' but I haven't been able to find any listed under 'sexual misconduct,' despite this field obviously being just as essential to politics."

At press time, the political science department announced study abroad opportunities in the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Roommates Still Missing Under Rubble After Opening Tupperware Cabinet

The rescue team is "confident" that the trapped pair should be able to survive "for up to a week" off of scraps that they failed to properly scrub from the tupperware before storing it.

Following days of search and rescue efforts, authorities have confirmed that they are still searching for survivors amongst the rubble left behind in the wake of a tupperware cabinet being opened.

According to an Ann Arbor Fire Department spokesperson, the plastic landslide was triggered Tuesday evening when 525 Walnut Ave resident Carmen Schultz attempted to retrieve a tupperware container to store her pasta leftovers.

Authorities believe that Schultz is trapped with her roommate, Maria Sanchez, but are optimistic the two are still alive. "As awful as this situation is, it could've been a lot worse," said search director Todd McPherson. "These roommates were cheap as shit and couldn't afford the fancy glass tupperware. The crappy plastic stuff they had weighs a lot less and doesn't shatter, thank god."

"I just can't believe this happened in our kitchen," said roommate Clare Walenski. "We're always so careful when we throw containers in there. And since we always close the door so quickly, there's no way we could've known that those noises meant the stack was unstable."

In the days since the disaster, emergency services have brought in search and rescue canine teams to sniff out the survivors. Unfortunately, teams have reported that their work has been hindered by distracting scents coming from the house's overfull trashcan and mass of unwashed dishes.

At press time, the National Weather Service had issued an extreme avalanche warning for the area surrounding the closet in the apartment's entry way.

CS Majors Living In Fishbowl Lack Sufficient Swimming Room, Filtration, Aquarium Gravel, Report Finds

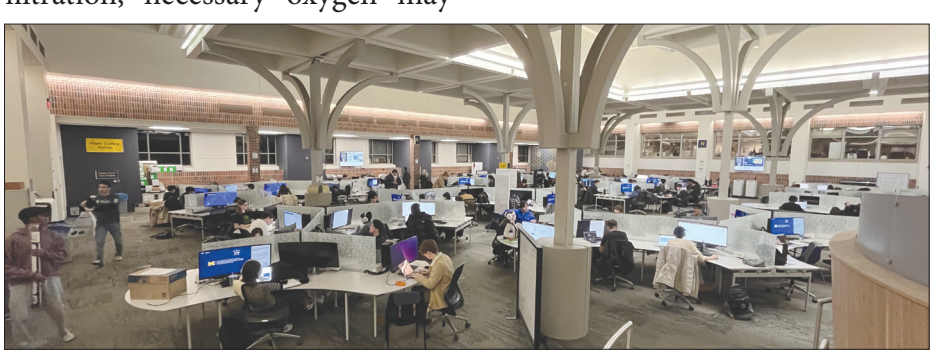
The University of Michigan has come under fire recently due to a report from the Humane Society criticizing the conditions of the Aqua computatrum fish kept in its fishbowl, a smelly, dead-eyed species commonly known as computer science students.

"A fishbowl that size can only contain maybe ten CS majors, otherwise they won't have enough room to move around and might even start killing each other," the report said. "Meanwhile the room regularly appears to contain a hundred of them, and as a result they just huddle at their computers without moving around at all."

To make matters worse, the fishbowl reportedly does not contain any sort of filtration system, a necessary component of any aquarium. In the absence of filtration, necessary oxygen may be depleted from the environment, a problem compounded by the toxic fumes generated by many CS majors.

Similarly, the report also criticized the decor of the fishbowl. "We know the University cannot incorporate any hazardous grass or other parts of nature, as these would likely result in the deaths of any CS students unfortunate enough to touch them," the report said. "But the fishbowl should at least contain some colorful aquarium gravel or a fake treasure chest or something, not just computers."

Several CS majors residing in the fishbowl were asked for their perspectives on their conditions but were unable to provide comment, as their eyes glazed over after precisely six seconds of social interaction with another person.



The report also recommended stabilizing the environment by adding bottom-feeding creatures such as freshwater snails, brine shrimp, or econ majors.

Area Woman Unsure If She Should Buy Situationship $265 Christmas Gift

Recent polling has revealed 78% of women in situationships wrestle with whether to get their situationship a Christmas gift worth more than $200. The same poll finds that 70% of those women are leaning towards yes.

Brooke Mouth, LSA junior and current situationship participant, is weighing her options. "On the one hand, he has never made me come. But on the other hand, he took me out to dinner last week for the first time. But then on the other hand again, we went to the Qdoba in the union basement. He has really been wanting a signed George Pickens jersey, which is $456. I only have $500 in my bank account, but he's worth it I guess."

Others, like Ford junior Sophie Spalling, are hoping for a gift in return. "I am buying him some video game he's been talking about," Spalling said. "I am mostly hoping he has listened to me talk about the Dior lip oil after every time we've hooked up for the past six months."

Peter Upton, Ford senior, who's been hooking up with Sophie Spalling for the past year, said, "No, I don't know why we would ever do gifts. We aren't like that. I'm just not ready for a relationship right now. I am getting my best friend Hailey this Dior lip oil or some shit. I don't know, Sophie always talks about it so I thought it'd be a good gift for her."

University physicists have recently discovered the left-foot rule, a novel technique to replace the right-hand rule, which has historically been a common aid for students new to physics in understanding vector interactions.

When asked how the left-foot rule works, Kyle Lemming, the head researcher, said, "I don't know actually, but we'll figure it out later. This really just shows those shmucks that the right-hand rule is now old news. I think this is a real breakthrough in science. I'm sick of having to untie and retie my shoe laces, though."

John Bartel, another one of the researchers who uncovered this rule, clarified that it was "nothing like the right-hand rule. It's totally different, but yeah, it replaces it. No, I don't know how it works."

The University is currently working on adding the left-foot rule to its physics curriculum, but some concerns have been raised. Besides the unclear methodology behind the rule, students are worried about how they will view their left foot under a desk and the hygiene of walking around with only one shoe.

"My class smells bad enough as it is," said one University professor. "Now they want these kids to take off their shoes? Not enough air freshener in the world could mask that stench."

At press time, the researchers shifted their focus to developing lab-safe footwear that allows for easier access to the left foot.

Woman In House "Probably" Let In By Roommate

Recent reports reveal that all of the residents of 3226 Packard agree that the woman currently sitting on their couch "was most likely let in by someone who lives here."

"Sometimes, you walk into the living room and a girl is sitting there," explained 3226 resident Ryan Malone. "That's just how it is. She looked nice, and it didn't seem like she was out of place, so I just left her be. I'm pretty sure that Nathan invited her over, and he'll probably be back soon."

Malone claimed that "none" of the woman's behavior was at all alarming or suspicious, and that she mainly "sat on the couch, checked her phone, or looked at various objects on our shelves with mild interest."

"I mean, she's gotta be here to hang out with Ryan or Vish, I think," said Nathan Zhang, a resident of 3226 Packard. "I didn't really get a chance to talk with her but we both said 'hi' as I was leaving for class, so I assume she was let in by one of the other two."

"Yeah, that girl is definitely supposed to be here," claimed 3226 resident Vish Chanda. "When I asked her how her day was going she said 'good,' and when I asked what she was up to she said 'not much,' so that basically settles it. She's probably allowed to be here."

At press time, a woman was seen leaving 3226 Packard while carrying a television.

Film-Bro Boyfriend Swears He Watches Porn For The Plot

Last Tuesday, economics major Steven Brown was overheard explaining to his girlfriend that his excessive porn consumption is purely from a cinematographic perspective.

"No babe you don't get it," Brown was heard assuring his girlfriend of three years, "it's not that I find them hotter than you. No, you're so hot that would be impossible. It's just a really impressive film genre. I mean come on the way that she looks at the camera — that Kubrick stare? Oh man, that should've swept the awards."

Brown continued to praise his favorite pornographic film, Schindler's Fist, for its incredible pacing that rewarded patience amongst its viewers.

"I don't expect you to get it because you aren't into movies," said Brown, "like no offense but that's just not really your thing so I don't think it's really your place to criticize my hobbies. Like do you know how rare it is to find a male lead whose performance rivals Philip Seymour Hoffman in The Master?"

Brown further defended his media choices by pointing out that his girlfriend often watched rom-coms, which are "basically the same thing" but without any of the artistic flair that makes them worth watching.

"C'mon babe, your favorite movie is When Harry Met Sally. How is that any different than the stuff I like? It's literally equal to Good Will Humping but with a worse climax and subpar sound design."

At press time, Brown was seen using his newfound free time as a single man to lobby the Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences to make pornos eligible for nomination in all categories.

Phone Call With Dad Gonna Catch You Up On All The Movies

Rice was also excited to get updates from her parents on the neighbor's "hideous" new lawn decorations.

Recently students across campus have reported that routine phone calls with their dads have resulted in them "knowing all the movies now for some reason."

Sophomore Brooklyn Rice was one of the first to come forward, saying, "I've been trying to call my dad more this semester, because we don't see each other often, you know? But every time I call him, even if we're just talking about classes and stuff, he ends up explaining the plot of every Jurassic Park movie to me."

"I'm not even sure how it happens," Rice continued. "One second I'm telling him I bought cheese and crackers from the store and next he's listing out every actor who starred in the 1973 Sci-fi/Thriller Soylent Green."

Freshman Bradley Wang explained nearly identical circumstances. "I don't get it," he said. "How can he name every movie to have won 'Best Picture'? Also, why does he have encyclopedic knowledge of every actor who's ever existed?"

"It's weird cause I don't even really see him watch movies," Wang added. "Either he hovers behind me like a serial killer when I'm watching a movie or he puts the latest Jason Statham movie on for the 40th time."

At press time, Rice was seen on the phone with her mom, being caught up on all the PTA drama.

Hot Guy In Lecture Only Staring At You Because Clock Above Your Head

Last week, sophomore Betty Reed reported that the hottest guy in her Spanish 231 recitation kept staring at her, but new evidence suggests he was merely looking at the clock right above her seat.

"On the very first day of class, I decided Ethan Andrews was the love of my life," said Reed. "He had me at 'hola, me llamo Ethan.' Of course, he never told me his last name, but that's what the People tab on Canvas is for. Also, he hasn't spoken to me again since that moment, but…I have a feeling he likes me back."

Reed recently noticed Andrews glancing in her direction a few times throughout class, especially towards the end. "He's always looking slightly above me for some reason," she said. "I think it's because he finds the top of my head really attractive. That isn't a fetish I've ever heard of before, but when you love someone you accept them for all their quirks."

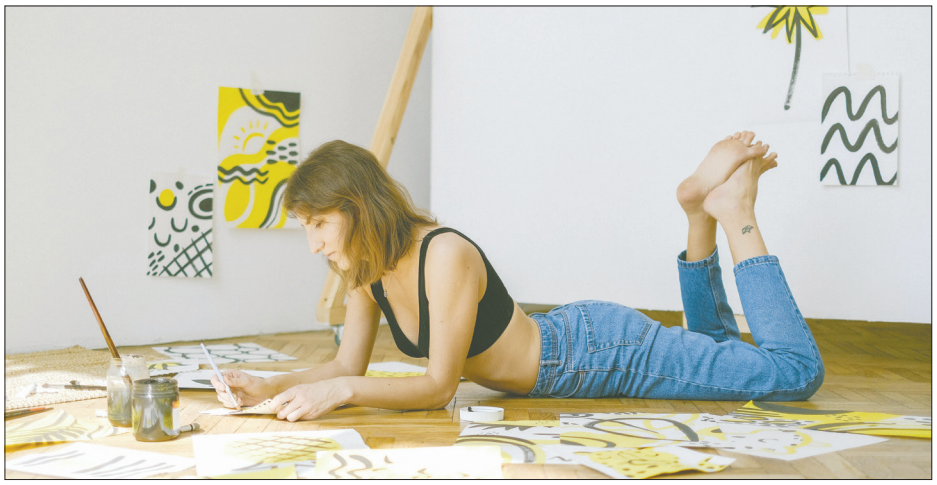
Reed also noted that Andrews had a "glassy-eyed stare," which she determined was either an eye condition or "the look of love."

Andrews, on the other hand, says that his glances in Reed's direction are because of the clock above her. "I love that clock," he explained. "It is mi amor. Our profesora makes us put away our phones and computers during class, so I just stare at the clock and count down the minutes until I can go home."

When asked about his feelings for Reed, Andrews replied "quien?"

Andrews was overheard muttering "ese reloj es muy bonito" last class.

Roommate Decides 6 AM Perfect Time For Arts & Crafts



Farbacher was considering purchasing a drum kit to get his own creative juices flowing in the mornings.

Reports indicate that John Stevens, a Bursley Hall resident, has recently discovered that 6 am is the perfect time to catch up on fun arts and crafts-themed trends despite sharing a 150-square foot dorm with a roommate.

"It's just a great way to start my day", says Stevens. "I can wake up and get those creative juices flowing. I love to paint, paper mache, draw, and even create origami. The morning sun is so inspiring."

"Yeah, I'm really happy for him. I love it when he turns on every light in our dorm before the sun even comes up, after his 6 alarms go off," said Alvin Farbacher, Stevens' roommate. "My favourite part is when he shakes me awake to ask if he knows where his yellow crayon has gone, or if I have any tape he can borrow. Sometimes he even asks me to critique his work."

When asked about Stevens' creative process, Farbacher explained that "he loves to start by watching 5-minute crafts on full volume without any headphones. He'll then transition into his inspiration playlist, which is usually some NBA Youngboy or Frank Sinatra. After that, he just gets really into it; sometimes, he'll even start speaking Italian, or talk about how the world is his canvas and paint on the walls. One time, he thought he was a reincarnation of Van Gogh and tried cutting his ear off. He's really talented, and we started hanging up his artwork on the dorm mini fridge. Hopefully John starts hosting some 6 am artist parties or masterclasses or something."

Stevens has recently begun exploring his interest in sculpture-making, including woodworking and pottery. At press time, Stevens was seen researching the best welding torches to use in a dorm room.

Unforeseen Eye Contact On Diag Does Irreparable Damage To Previously Stable Acquaintanceship

Recent reports suggest that the relationship between Danny Cannon, Ross sophomore, and Pratik Iyer, LSA junior, suffered irreversible harm Wednesday when a sudden and unexpected moment of eye contact struck the two of them during a routine walk to class.

The incident, which occurred at 5:15PM in front of Hatcher Graduate Library, immediately disrupted the pseudo-friendly, in-class connection that had been building between the two during lectures of AMCULT 352.

"In class, we sit together just fine," shared Iyer. "But in that moment, it was just too much and too fast– It's like his eyes were trying to say, 'what are we? Where is this going?'– and I'm just not sure if I'm ready to move to that stage yet. I mean, I don't even know the guy's last name, are we really 'say hi in the hallway' kind of people?"

Two Liberty security agents who witnessed the event recalled being shocked by the entire ordeal. John Silvers, one of the officers, said, "You could tell from the very beginning that something was up with these guys. I mean there was a real will-they won't-they acknowledge each other's existence vibe."

At press time, sources confirmed that Cannon ultimately decided to attempt a "half-hearted" wave, but Iyer had already looked away by the time Cannon got his hand up, so Cannon pretended he was just scratching an itch on his nose.

"She's Not A Great Example Of A Good Person" Says Woman Who Doesn't Want To Say Cunt

Insisting she "really hates bringing other women down," LSA junior Hannah Pierce spent most of Friday evening describing one particular woman in her friend group as "not a great example of a good person," which sources confirmed is her polite way of refusing to say "cunt" out loud.

"At first I just assumed she was going through it," Hannah said. "Maybe she was fighting with her boyfriend or stressed from school. So whenever she would go silent for an hour at dinner or drop one of those tiny mean comments, I told myself she was just having a hard week. But after a year of weaponized silence and casually evil side remarks, I have realized she is just a bitch."

Other friends report similar experiences. "Me and Kristen have had five full out screaming fights this year," said roommate Lily Nguyen. "We always hug it out and promise to forgive everything the next morning, so it weirdly feels healthy."

Another friend described a recent outing that now feels less like a hangout and more like unpaid labor. "Once Kristen invited me to the most popular restaurant in town," she said. "I showed up and waited thirty minutes in line alone before she sauntered up and walked right in with me like I was her emotional support intern. I basically worked there at that point."

Despite the mounting evidence, Hannah continues to frame her criticism as gentle observation.

"I do not want to call another woman a bad word," she said. "So instead I say things like she is not a great example of a good person or she is still figuring out basic humanity. It sounds supportive. But in my heart I know I am describing a girl who treats everyone like her staff and still tips emotionally."

Masked Man Remains World's Most Prolific Criminal

Recent news from Interpol reports that Masked Man remains the world's most prolific criminal, and that global intelligence agencies are continuing their centuries-long search to bring him to justice. Masked Man is widely-known for the wide range of crimes that he has committed throughout his lifetime—from petty theft to heinous murders—in every nation in the world.

"Masked Man is one of the most skillful bandits that I've ever seen in my life," said senior CIA intelligence officer and seasoned sleuth John Poirot, who has been chasing the slippery criminal for his entire career. "After all this time, we still have almost no information about who he is and what his motives are. Witnesses are all over the place after he strikes. Some say he's super tall, some say he's the shortest man alive. His race is entirely indistinguishable. Some people have even floated the idea that it's not a 'he' at all."

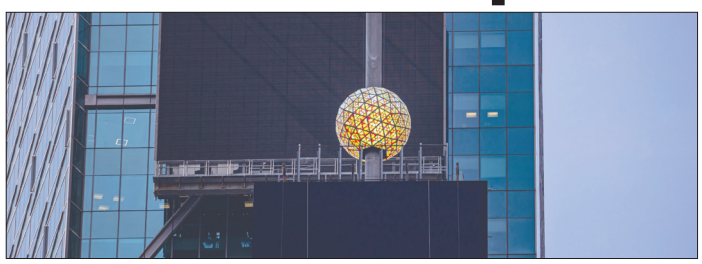
However, there is one thing that the international detective community is in agreement with: Masked Man's signature face-covering material that obscures his identity from anyone at the scene of the crime.

"At this point, Masked Man has gotta be the richest guy in the world," said MI6 director Blaise Metreweli, "All those heists and bank robberies were worth a pretty penny. Honestly, I don't even know what I would do with all of that."

At press time, Masked Man was seen robbing banks on three different continents at once. Security analysts remain confident that a logical explanation for this exists and are firmly dedicated to bringing Masked Man down, once and for all.

Economists predict that the sheer number of bounties posted for the capture of Masked Man would likely lead to a global economic crash if he were ever apprehended.

Ball To Drop



Countdown Entertainment briefly considered increasing the speed of the ball's descent or painting it a different color, but opted to change nothing after severe public pushback.

Countdown Entertainment, the company which manages the ball drop in Times Square, announced Monday that they intend to drop the ball this year. This announcement aligns with over a century of annual ball drops commemorating the beginning of each new year.

Countdown Entertainment CEO Jared Falbrough said it was an easy decision to drop the ball this year. "We don't even really think about it," Falbrough said. "Of course we're going to drop the ball, because otherwise how would people know it's officially a new year? They have no other way of telling time."

Janice Creply has been a resident of New York City for four decades and said she never gets tired of the ball drop. "My favorite part of the ball drop? It's tough to choose, but I'd have to say the part where the ball gets to the bottom," said Creply. "Everything leading up to that is pretty great, y'know, because the ball is getting lower and lower and you're all like 'oh, it's getting close to the bottom.' But nothing beats that moment when it actually touches down. Gets me every single time!"

At press time, Countdown Entertainment raised the ball in preparation for the drop.

Clarence Thomas Smiles

Recent reports from the Thomas household indicate that the Supreme Court justice broke his nearly seven-year streak of irritability and disgruntlement and "lit up for once."

"Clarence brought home court documents to write a dissent against a case that ruled in favor of a plaintiff who went into a coma after they used a product with an undisclosed allergen," Thomas' wife, Ginni, said. "He looked at some disturbing images the plaintiff provided of her cheeks and eyelids completely swollen up, and I looked over at him. Instead of a look of distress, he was cracking a smile saying how she looked like a chipmunk."

The last time Thomas visibly perked up with a smile of satisfaction was when a Fox News anchor was lauding him for striking down basic civil rights.

Surprisingly, Thomas had managed to stay straight-faced while dealing with his most pressing affairs, which included inviting reconsiderations to contraception access and same-sex marriage, joining the majority for overturning Roe v. Wade, being the sole dissenter to not blocking the release of January 6th files, expanding presidential immunity, ending affirmative action, his wife's bribery scandal, and receiving all expenses paid luxury vacations every year for two decades.

"After he complained about always feeling upset, I suggested that he see a psychologist to determine if he had some sort of mood disorder. But instead of being on board, he chuckled and quickly shut down that idea." Thomas' doctor James Connolly commented. "It's possible one of the few things that brings him joy is publicly disagreeing with a reasonable argument."

At press time, Thomas was seen smirking at a kid who dropped his ice cream cone.

White House Orders Air Force To Shoot Down Santa For Communist Ideals

The White House claims the decision was not related to President Trump appearing on a specific list.

In a recent press briefing, White House Press Secretary Karoline Leavitt defended Trump's order to the United States Air Force to shoot down Santa Claus for spreading "communist ideologies" to children around the world.

"Santa Claus is a danger to modern American society and the utopia President Trump has created through his first year in office," said Leavitt. "There's a reason his first name is so close to Satan and it's because he's coming into our homes to indoctrinate our children with anti-Christian, pro-woke, pro-communist propaganda."

Leavitt went on to explain how Santa promotes communism by wearing red with a gold belt buckle, and DEI initiatives with his team of transgender reindeer. She further explained that Rudolph was "clearly an instance of DEI favoring transgenders with disabilities."

"Good children should pull themselves up by their bootstraps, not accept handouts from some communist pedophile," said Leavitt before explaining that Santa's name appeared numerous times in the Epstein files. "By only giving coal to naughty children, Santa is disparaging the hard working coal barons. Under Biden, Santa was giving those same children solar cells and small wind turbines, indicating wokeist, pro-China sentiments."

In a message to troops, Secretary of War Pete Hegeseth, mobilized the Air Force, telling them to shoot "anything that moves," especially "anything with a red light on it." This has reportedly caused some confusion as F-16s engaged with hobbyist drones, commercial aircraft, and the lights on tall towers that prevent planes from running into them.

At press time, the White House had begun deporting elves on the shelves for being Venezuelan assets.

Breaking: MAGA Grandparents Less Homophobic Now

As the holiday season approaches, hundreds of young adults are preparing to 'come out' to their families in what would usually be a deeply harrowing experience. However, given the recent release of emails implying that President Trump gave former President Bill Clinton an illicit blowjob, several Trump-supporters have come forth, saying they are, "cool with that now."

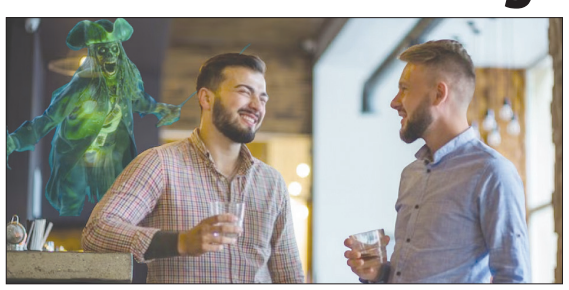
One self-identifying Trump-supporter, Genevieve Sprouse, told her grandson Jimmy that, "Yeah, that gay shit is okay with me now," after his coming out. In a later interview she elaborated, saying, "In my eighty years of life I have fought vehemently against gay marriage, but if President Trump's got a little gay in him, we all probably do. Actually, is this a good time to tell you guys I made out with a girl in '68?"

Another MAGA grandfather, Jim Wilson said, "I can say proudly that I've turned over a new leaf. I used to spit on gay people walking down the street, but I don't have that kind of hatred in my heart anymore. I love and accept the LGBTQ+ community. Oh, and also pedophiles."

In fact, many grandparents have taken to their Twitter pages, encouraging their grandchildren to be honest with them this holiday season, posting things like, "I will love you no matter what," "Your sexuality does not define you," or even "I also blew Bill in the 90s."

At press time, MAGA grandparents across the nation were seen trying to figure out which flag emoji was for gay pride among a sea of countries they'd never heard of.

Awkward Friend Making Eye Contact With Shoes, Ceiling, 18th-Century Phantom Floating Just Past Your Head



Recent reports indicate that Reneer and the 18th-century phantom had a falling out over the extension of suffrage to non-land-owning men.

A poorly socialized young man at a bar last Thursday was seen to be transfixed by his own shoes, the lights on the ceiling, and what some could only speculate to be the apparition of an 18th-century baron in a tattered waistcoat floating just past his friend's head.

"Ethan [Reneer]'s a great guy, and I've been friends with him for a long time. He's just a little shy, I think," said Reneer's friend, Ishaan Chandran. "I'll be telling him a story, and he'll be nodding along and asking follow-up questions and everything, so I know he's listening to me. But for some reason, even when he's the one talking, he's either always looking at the floor, the ceiling, or slightly past me…I'm like, bro. Who the hell are you looking at? Who are you talking to? We've known each other since ninth grade. Let me make a Hinge profile for you, dude."

Chandran, after repeatedly glancing over his shoulder and seeing nothing but empty air, asked Reneer if he was okay, to which Reneer reportedly assured the phantom that everything was "fine" and "perfectly peachy."

"I've tried to get him out of his shell countless times," continued Chandran. "I mean, I took him to this bar to meet girls. But he keeps talking to the air next to me about the Industrial Revolution."

At press time, Reneer was seen bumping into inanimate objects and apologizing to them.

Sex-Positive Brain Donor Gives Head To Patient

In a touching turn of events, Bradley Sanchez, a generous and sexually open-minded brain donor, decided he would give the gift of a lifetime to a lonely hospital patient in need.

"I'm a giver," said Sanchez. "Most people don't know this about me, but my love language is acts of service. When I heard that there was a soul out there in need of my head, I came as quickly as I could."

"When Bradley told me what he was going to do, it was the happiest moment of my life," said Harold Barnes, the patient in question. "I was so stressed about my condition, but he just really helped me take a big load off, you know? I feel like I have a new lease on life now. And due to my rare illness, nobody has satisfied my needs. Until now."

Barnes' doctor has also approved this procedure. "It was an extremely quick process," she commented. She also noted that Barnes' mental health significantly improved in the following days. Despite Barnes's concerns that the process was "sloppy," doctors assured him that the procedure was a success.

By the time the procedure was over, there were bodily fluids everywhere.

Hockey Players Agree "Beating Shit Out Of Each Other" Most Sensible Way To Resolve Minor Disputes

A recent study found that hockey players are in unanimous agreement that "beating the shit out of each other" is the most effective and sensible way to resolve minor conflicts and disputes.

"It's only right to act on first impulses," said college hockey player Jay Matthews. "Something I learned from my favorite player Brad Marchand is that you should always smack someone in the nose if they piss you off."

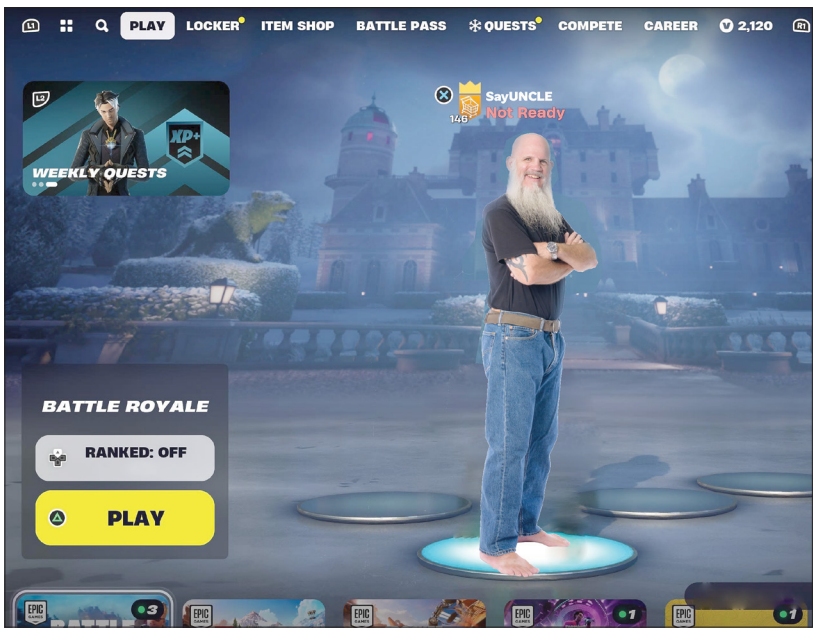
"The other day, some guy tries to skip me in line at Chipotle so I checked him into the glass shield," reported Matthews. "What else was I supposed to do, eh?"

Similar sentiments extend throughout the hockey world and are even being taught to younger generations.

"It's important we instill these conflict resolution techniques in our young hockey players," said youth hockey coach Shawn Zamboni. "Teaching kids to suppress emotions like anger and frustration is interfering with their natural emotional processes and it's better to let them beat each other up and let things resolve themselves."

At press time, Matthews was seen asking a fellow student if they wanted to "drop the gloves" after taking his favorite spot in the library.

American hockey players also agree that talking in a fake Canadian accent is "really cool."



Epic Games has also released an "uncomfortably long hug" emote to go with the uncle character that will cost 800 V-Bucks.

Fortnite Introduces Your Uncle As A Playable Character

This past week, avid Fortnite gamer Brayden Belnap was stunned to find his Uncle John available for purchase in the Fortnite item shop for 1,200 V-Bucks. The skin has John sporting his signature wife-beater and dirty pink sweatpants, with an alternate style allowing players to wear his famous "Never Forget 9/11" baseball cap.

"Of course I had to cop [the skin], shit was fire," said Belnap, "but when I told my friend about it, he checked the item shop and only saw his Uncle Bill."

Belnap's friend, Josh Carter, explained his experience. "I got this full-screen ad telling me to spend a bunch of V-Bucks on the 'Uncle Bill Bundle' when I booted up the game. It was pricey, but I had to get it for the 'Bill's Second Divorce Papers' backbling and the 'Bill's Used KIA Soul' glider."

Epic Games stated that the addition of these uncles is part of a massive Fortnite update that promises all players will be able to acquire skins of their own uncles. Local uncle Uncle Buford has expressed excitement about his inclusion, stating "I don't know how they put me in the computer, but I know that sexy waitress Shelly's son really likes those Fortnites, so maybe he'll put in a good word with his mom, eh?"

Some players were confused about the addition, such as Uncle Buford's nephew, Scotty. "Last year they added LeBron, MrBeast, and Kai Cenat! Why would they add my stupid weird uncle?"

Advisor That Told Trump Epstein Story Would "Blow Over" Now Regretting Choice Of Words

Goeff Whitebane, a senior advisor to President Trump, reportedly regrets telling the president he believed that the Epstein controversy would "blow over." While he merely sought to reassure the president, the recent revelation of emails in which Jeffery Epstein's brother Mark describes a picture of "Trump blowing Bubba" has recontextualized his words.

"All I wanted was to cheer up our beloved President Trump," Whitebane said. "He's been so down since the Epstein controversy started and it's just really difficult to see him like this. He hardly even cracks a smile at his hourly Big Mac. Even when we tried promising to execute his political opponents, he just stared out the window and said 'that's nice.'"

Although Whitebane claims it "seemed like a great thing to say at the time," he now wishes he had used a slightly different phrasing. "I could have said anything else, man. Why didn't I just say 'everything will work out okay' or 'soon the media will only report what you tell them and you won't have to worry about this?' Now every time Trump sees me he just sadly shakes his head."

McKenzeigh Rutledge, a member of Trump's staff eyeing career advancement opportunities, said she believed Whitebane's intentions were not as noble as he claimed. "I think he knew exactly what he was doing," Rutledge said. "He must have been planted by the Demoncrats to undermine our movement. President Trump should take swift action against this undercover radical Marxist by giving his job to me."

At press time, White House aides confirmed that "the president's little playdate with mayor-elect Mamdani did cheer him up a little."

Woman Soft Launching Twerk

In a brief, 30-second moment of courage, a local woman was reportedly seen attempting a movement that some would describe as a twerk while dancing among friends at a local bar.

"It's just something new that I'm trying," said the woman, Sarah Wilson. "I've had it in the works for a little bit. It definitely wasn't ready for public rollout, but hey, I'd had a few drinks, and the music was great, so I decided why the hell not? It was nerve-wracking, for sure, but I'm glad I finally put it out there."

Onlookers to the act of bravery, which was slipped in between a stanky leg and the Macarena, described the event as "something you could tell she had only ever attempted in the privacy of her own bedroom," "not bad, actually," and "more of a meek shake of the cheek."

"For a second, I was worried for her," said Wilson's childhood best friend Mariam Iglesias. "She has a weak back. But she seems to have pulled it off. It all happened in a flash…one moment, I look over and she's gyrating her right leg—business as usual. Then, all of a sudden, she's twerking, I think. Then, back to normal. All I could think was, 'Huh, not bad, actually.'"

"Reception was not amazing, I'll admit, but also not as bad as I'd imagined it to be," continued Wilson. "I'm just thankful I was able to do it surrounded by people who support me and whom I love. I feel very blessed."

At press time, Wilson was overheard repeatedly reassuring friends that the move was "still in development."

Coal Miner Jobs Increase 200% In Preparation For Donald Trump's Stocking

Some Coal Barons have begun looking into outsourcing jobs to overseas mines to increase supply and decrease labor costs.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics recently released its job report for the month of November. According to the report, the number of coal miners has increased by 200% in preparation for Donald Trump's Christmas stocking.

"We supply a lot of our coal to places like DTE and Victorian era orphanages, but out of nowhere we got our largest order of the year, so we needed to step up our labor force," Renewable Nonrenewable Co.'s owner Clete Thomas said. "The invoice was for Kris Kringle, and he said that someone has been a very naughty boy this year."

The "naughty boy" in question is the United States Commander-in-Chief Donald Trump. According to Kringle, he has "never had to order this much coal in all of [his] life, and that includes two world wars and the thing that definitely did not happen at Tiananmen Square."

"President Trump has exceeded all of my expectations, he really wanted to get those coal numbers up, so he resorted to being very naughty," Kringle said. "It's not only my list that he's on, and trust me, I've checked twice."

Many workers feel Trump was only naughty to help out the American people. According to miner Macklin Ferguson, Trump "took the hit to help [him] get back on his feet."

"Trump being on Santa's naughty list truly is being America First," Ferguson said. "I finally have a stable job, and Trump is the reason for it. I don't think I could thank him enough for being a very bad boy just so the American people can survive."

At press time, Trump said "coal under pressure becomes diamonds. Many people, in fact everybody I have been hearing, are saying that I am the coal, and am soon to become a diamond."

Santa Inks Deal With Palantir To Conduct Naughty List Roundups

News out of the North Pole confirms that Santa Claus has recently signed a contract with Palantir Technologies Inc. to conduct the annual "naughty list" checks ahead of Christmas.

Palantir, which is typically contracted by private corporations, local police departments, and governments including the United States federal government and the United Arab Emirates, provides a range of data storage and analytics platforms to institutions seeking to enhance their capacity for surveillance, data sharing, or repression of minority groups.

"Santa's Workshop's collaboration with Palantir Technologies will unlock a new frontier of naughty-or-nice classification systems," said North Pole Press Secretary Hermey. "With improved data-sharing between the child surveillance department and the manufacturing department, Santa welcomes a new era of production."

Most of Santa's elves have been supportive of the decision. "For centuries, we've had to wait until the last minute to make and wrap presents," said Buddy, the managing director of manufacturing. "Judging the moral standings of children on a case-by-case basis is just bad for business. With Palantir's cutting-edge statistical analysis software smoothing out the process, we can save billions with only a few false-positive naughties."

"We will ensure that naughty children are most definitely getting coal," said CEO Alex Karp in a recent interview about the deal. Palantir has further promised that their innovative approach to 24/7 monitoring and regression modeling can place children on the correct list "up to five years in advance."

At press time, Palantir was seen meeting with the Tooth Fairy to discuss a deal that would greatly improve her response times.

Nighttime Runners Gearing Up For Another Night Of Terrifying Innocent Walkers

According to reports, nighttime runners are eagerly anticipating another night of petrifying innocent pedestrians.

"I get such a rush when I sprint by people trying to make it back to their homes after a long day," said nighttime runner Ben Thompson. "It's even better when I don't wear a headlight so they definitely can't see me coming. Just thinking about it gets me excited"

"It's always a good night when I get to lace up my Asics and disturb the peace," commented another runner. "My favorite is when I yell at walkers 'on your left' and watch them freak out and scramble around."

"I think sadistic would be the right term to describe these people," said local psychologist Jerry Nelson. "These antics are even more of a reason to question the sanity of people who run for pleasure."

Nighttime runners are reportedly thrilled to "cause a few more heart attacks" as the hours of daily sunlight continue to wane in the upcoming weeks.

At press time, Thompson was seen comparing his best Strava times with his friends.

Netflix revealed that Zendaya would play the role of Grumpy Cat in a live-action movie set to release in 2028.

A recent announcement from the actor himself revealed that Netflix has tapped none other than Tom Holland to play the titular Alex in their upcoming biopic Alex from Target, set to hit the streaming service in 2037.

The film follows the story of Alex Lee, a teenage heartthrob who went viral after a photo was taken of him while working the checkout line at Target in November of 2014. The tweet propelled him into massive social media visibility and ultimately led to an appearance on The Ellen DeGeneres Show later that year.

"I feel so honored that I get to step into Alex's non-slip shoes," Holland wrote on Instagram, where he shared a photo of himself standing beside Lee in front of the Target where the viral snapshot was originally taken.

"We really wanted to dive into Alex's inner world—I honestly think this is one of the most important stories we could be telling right now," stated director Cecelia Pearson. Alex From Target marks Pearson's debut film. "I'm just so thrilled we got Tom for the role. We needed someone who could bring real emotional depth to Alex's journey from the checkout line to the public eye."

Pearson is eager to get more stars onboard with the project. "We're looking at Nicole Kidman for Ellen, and we're currently between the Rock and Tilda Swinton for Alex's manager."

Pearson and her team at Netflix have affirmed that Alex From Target is an entry film in the greater 'Meme Cinematic Universe' (MCU), with future films to focus on the Walmart yodeling kid and the 'You know I had to do it to em' guy.

SENIOR FAREWELLS

No, I Will Not Have Sex With You

By: Ben Farber

Ladies, ladies, one at a time, please. I know it can be hard to resist the best Neo-Classical-Economist-Italian-Major-Groyper-ANTIFA-Bootlicker-Rubik's-Cube-Solving-Feminist-Incel writer on the staff of The Every Three Weekly. But sadly, I am not going to have sex with you.

I know it is devastating to hear, but it just is not happening. Too many times have I been looked at with the formidable fuck-me-eyes, and I just cannot take it anymore. We live in a disgusting age where men are highly sexualized in television, podcasts, and the ever alive industry of print media, so I am standing up to the Matriarchy by choosing not to have sex with you.

If I were to have sex with you, I would have to let you know that I am allergic to anything made of latex, polyurethane, polyisoprene, lambskin, and whatever is in the wrapper of a fun-size Three Musketeers bar. I am also very conscious of the waste that we put into the environment.

It also just wouldn't be fair. If I had sex with you, I would have to have sex with everybody else as well. I also like to be wined and dined beforehand, and I have been known to run up a pretty steep bill at California Pizza Kitchen, so I will spare you the trouble.

I am truly sorry I am going to deprive you of the best 1 inch and 5 seconds tops of your life. Sometimes having the magic touch is actually a curse: for who could ever learn to love a beast?

I Can't Believe I'm The First Person You've Met From Idaho

By: Reganne Watts

No way! I can't believe that you've never met anyone else from Idaho. Well I guess you can check that off your bucket list.

Potatoes? Oh yeah we got loads. It's the only thing we have more of than Mormons. It's actually mandatory that every resident eats at least one potato per person per day, no exceptions for children or the elderly or people allergic to potatoes, if they exist.

Have you seen the massive potato our potato commission drives around? Hold on, you're telling me your state doesn't have a crop specific commission that drives around an extremely large version of the crop that made it famous? What about a potato mascot that shows up at the Famous Idaho Potato Bowl and other events around town? You're saying that's weird? No, it's something called culture, you should look it up.

This little senior farewell is probably the most publicity my state is going to get, other than its role as the setting for the hit 2025 film "A Minecraft Movie" and the 2004 cult classic "Napoleon Dynamite." Also, since Colston Loveland is gone, I'll be the most famous Idahoan on campus until I leave and there are none of us left.

Before I go, let me let you in on a little secret. You know Grand Teton National Park? It just means "big boob" in French.

Please Give Us Some Figgy Pudding

By Carolers

We're not fucking around this time. We want you to give us some figgy pudding. You laughed it off last year like we were joking, but this year you're gonna take us seriously. Our burning desire for figgy pudding has been simmering for a full year, and the Christmas season has once again unleashed our untethered lust for the forbidden gelatinous treasure.

Don't scream. Don't make any sudden moves. This guy with the elf ears next to me? Yeah, there's a gun behind his sheet music. I want you to turn around, walk SLOWLY into your kitchen, gather every container of figgy pudding that you have, and come right back here okay?

What? What even is figgy pudding? Are you stupid or something? It's um…well, it's…it's very important to us that you get that figgy pudding. Here, lemme just Google it real quick. Just so I can show you a photo and you can see what you're looking for. Here, it looks like this. Wow, that's weird, that is not how I pictured it at all. That almost looks more like a cake, that's so weird! Haha what the fuck, are you guys seeing this? Come look at this, did you know that's what figgy pudding looks like?

Ah, nevermind, that looks pretty nasty to be honest. Merry Christmas! Sorry about all that!

My Plan To Master Baits

By A Prospective North Campus RA

While they say everyone wants to be an RA, I do it better than anyone else. Nobody has the dedication, drive, or grip on Baits that I do.

For one, I have the stamina to last. I've been attending leadership classes for as long as I can remember, and I've had strong principles my whole life, ones that don't bend easily. I also recently watched a tutorial just to help me get up to speed with the modern RA scene. I've spent years preparing for this role; you could say I've been trying to master Baits since before I knew what I was doing.

Additionally, I've shown my hands-on skills by living in the dorm this past year. When things got tense, I wasn't scared to take matters into my own hands. When we had the fire alarm go off in the middle of the night, I got right to work and got dirty. This shows I'm well-equipped to handle leaks, bursts, or sudden messes with my calloused hands.

I also know when to have a delicate touch. I'm great at building interpersonal relationships; I can deal with jerks, but can also help people relax and relieve their tension by giving them the space and alone time they need. I'm relieved to know I won't be doing it alone, as I'll have my fellow RAs to help me shamelessly bring my explosive energy into our Baits community.

I feel really comfortable with the rhythm of Baits, and know when to take it slow, or when to start using firmer methods. I hope you will let me bring clarity to the residence next year, and will consider me for the role of RA.

You Have No Idea How Much Worse It Can Get

"2025 has been horrible!" "2025 has been the worst year ever!" "2025 destroyed my faith in humanity and forced me to renounce God and embrace death as a mercy!"

Well, that's just adorable. You guys really thought 2025 was that bad? The name's 2026, and I'm here to tell you that you have no idea how much worse it can get. Oh yeah, this shit's not slowing down anytime soon. In fact, it's speeding up. I know the weeks feel like years over there in 2025, but in 2026 the days will last decades. You're going to get so many notifications you won't even have time to open them.

Those Epstein revelations are just the beginning. If you're disturbed already, the shit that's about to come out might give you a heart attack. And no, there's no shot you're going to hold any of them accountable. That's not how it worked in 2025, and that's definitely not how it's going to work in 2026.

And that Trump guy, real psycho, right? But just you wait. Want to see how quickly a man's mind can go downhill? Well, you're gonna. I don't want to spoil too much, but avoid scheduling any vacations in Canada, Greenland, Venezuela, and California. And maybe try to forget any second languages you know.

Well, that's all from me. For now. Just remember: it can always get worse, and it will.

My Girlfriend Makes Me Wear Two Condoms

By A Guy With Two Penises

Dude, I can't believe my girlfriend makes me wear two condoms. It's so unfair. None of my friends have to wear two condoms! Well, none of my friends have two penises, which I know because we've all compared. And I obviously won because I had more penises than they did.

You know, one of my penii, George, is really girthy like a can of beans, and the other, Lord Agnar the Slayer of Pussy, is kind of thin and spindly. One is circumcised, the other isn't. They complement one another, like Glinda and Elphaba. Also because one is pink and the other is green. I spoke to my doctor about this, and they're not sure whether the whole thing is like a medical condition or just a curse from God. Whatever, that's the last time I'm taking my pants off in front of my ophthalmologist.

But unlike my girlfriend, I have a growth mindset. Maybe I can just get a super large condom and stuff both of my disco sticks in there. Or maybe she can get two IUDs. Just spitballing. Dude, don't even get me started on my balls. Anyway, no matter what, I still love my girlfriend. I mean, it's not every day that you get to meet a smart, kind woman with two vaginas.
